FINDINGS, CONCLUSIONS, AND RECOMMENDATION OF THE UNITED STATES MAGISTRATE JUDGE

Pursuant to the provisions of 28 U.S.C. § 636(b) and an Order of the Court in implementation thereof, subject cause has previously been referred to the United States Magistrate Judge. The findings, conclusions, and recommendation of the Magistrate Judge are as follows:

I. BACKGROUND

Petitioner is a federal prisoner incarcerated in FCI-Seagoville who challenges his federal conviction in United States v. Briscoe, No. 6:92-CR-0026-WSSM (W.D. Tex.) pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 2241. Petitioner names Dan Joslin as respondent.

On February 2, 1993, a jury convicted petitioner for conspiring to possess cocaine with intent to distribute. The United States District Court for the Western District of Texas entered judgment against petitioner and sentenced him to imprisonment. Petitioner unsuccessfully appealed his conviction and sentence. He also challenged his conviction and sentence through a motion to vacate pursuant to a 28 U.S.C. § 2255, which the Western District of Texas denied on July 2, 1996. On <sup>1</sup> In the instant action, petitioner challenges a conviction in which he was identified as "Derrick Dwayne Briscoe". For purposes of record keeping, the Court thus directs the Clerk of Court to add that name as an alias in this habeas action.

April 8, 1998, that court denied petitioner's motion for reduction of sentence based upon 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(2).

On January 12, 2006, this Court received the instant petition for writ of habeas corpus pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 2241 wherein petitioner claims that, in light of Blakely v. Washington, 542 U.S. 296 (2004) and United States v. Booker, 543 U.S. 220 (2005), he was sentenced in violation of the Constitution. The Court has not yet ordered an answer to the § 2241 petition.

II. JURISDICTION UNDER § 2241

Section 2241(a) provides district courts the power to grant a writ of habeas corpus to remedy a petitioner's restraint of liberty in violation of the constitution, treaties, or laws of the United States. United States v. Hayman, 342 U.S. 205, 211-12 & n.11 (1952). "Habeas corpus relief is extraordinary and 'is reserved for transgressions of constitutional rights and for a narrow range of injuries that could not have been raised on direct appeal and would, if condoned, result in a complete miscarriage of justice.'" Kinder v. Purdy, 222 F.3d 209, 213 (5th Cir. 2000) (quoting United States v. Vaughn, 955 F.2d 367, 368 (5th Cir. 1992)). While § 2255 provides the primary means of "collaterally attacking a federal sentence" and is the appropriate remedy for "errors that occurred at or prior to the sentencing," § 2241 is the proper procedural vehicle in which to raise an attack on "the manner in which a sentence is executed." Padilla v. United States, 416 F.3d 424, 425-426 (5th Cir. 2005) (internal quotations and citations omitted). The remedy afforded under § 2241 is "no different" from the scope of remedy afforded under § 2255. Kinder, 222 F.3d at 214. However, a petition filed under § 2241 "is not . . . a substitute for a motion under § 2255." See Jeffers v. Chandler, 253 F.3d 827, 830 (5th Cir. 2001).

A § 2241 petition that seeks to challenge the validity of a federal sentence, i.e., by attacking errors that occurred at trial or sentencing, must either be dismissed or construed as a § 2255 motion. See Pack v. Yusuff, 218 F.3d 448, 452 (5th Cir. 2000). However, if a petitioner establishes that the remedy provided under § 2255 is inadequate or ineffective to test the legality of his or her detention, a § 2241 petition that attacks custody resulting from a federally imposed sentence may be entertained under the “savings clause” of § 2255. Padilla, 416 F.3d at 426. That clause provides:

An application for a writ of habeas corpus in behalf of a prisoner who is authorized to apply for relief by motion pursuant to this section, shall not be entertained if it appears that the applicant has failed to apply for relief, by motion, to the court which sentenced him, or that such court has denied him relief, unless it also appears that the remedy by motion is inadequate or ineffective to test the legality of his detention.

28 U.S.C. § 2255. “[T]he burden of coming forward with evidence to show the inadequacy or ineffectiveness of a motion under § 2255 rests squarely on the petitioner.” Jeffers, 253 F.3d at 830. The case law is clear that “the inadequacy or inefficacy requirement is stringent.” Reyes-Requena v. United States, 243 F.3d 893, 901 (5th Cir. 2001). If a petitioner who has filed a § 2241 petition fails to show § 2255 to be inadequate or ineffective, then the Court lacks jurisdiction to consider the § 2241 petition. See Christopher v. Miles, 342 F.3d 378, 379 (5th Cir. 2003) (remanding a case for dismissal for lack of jurisdiction when the petitioner failed to show § 2255 inadequate or ineffective).

Utilization of § 2241 instead of § 2255 is limited to very specific situations, and a petitioner seeking relief under the savings clause of § 2255 must demonstrate three things:

(1) his claim is based on a retroactively applicable Supreme Court decision; (2) the Supreme Court decision establishes that he was ‘actually innocent’ of the charges against him because the decision decriminalized the conduct for which he was convicted; and (3) his claim would have been foreclosed by existing circuit precedent had he raised it at trial, on direct appeal, or in his original § 2255 petition.

Christopher, 342 F.3d at 382; accord Padilla, 416 F.3d at 426. One may not utilize § 2241 merely to avoid procedural hurdles presented under § 2255, such as the one-year statute of limitations or restriction on filing second or successive motions to vacate. See Pack, 218 F.3d at 453 (holding that neither a limitations bar nor successiveness make § 2255 ineffective or inadequate); Tolliver v. Dobre, 211 F.3d 876, 878 (5th Cir. 2000) (holding that successiveness does not make § 2255 ineffective or inadequate). As the Fifth Circuit noted in Pack,

[t]o hold otherwise would flout Congress's obvious intent to give meaning to these procedural requirements. A ruling that the section 2255 remedy was inadequate or ineffective, such that a petitioner could invoke section 2241, simply because the petitioner's prior section 2255 motion was unsuccessful, or barred, or because he could not file another motion, would render those procedural requirements a nullity and defy Congress's clear attempt to limit successive habeas petitions.

218 F.3d at 453.

In this case, petitioner does not specifically invoke the savings clause of § 2255 so that he may pursue his claims under § 2241. Nevertheless, he essentially contends that § 2255 is ineffective or inadequate because he cannot overcome the procedural requirements of that statute. Although he relies upon Blakely and Booker, those cases are not retroactively applicable to cases on collateral review. See Padilla v. United States, 416 F.3d 424, 427 (5th Cir. 2005). Nor do those cases demonstrate that petitioner was convicted of a nonexistent offense. Id. Those cases do not establish that petitioner was actually innocent of the charges against him or decriminalize the conduct for which petitioner was convicted. Consequently, petitioner has failed to carry his burden to show § 2255 is ineffective or inadequate so that he can pursue his claims under § 2241.

In light of such failure, the Court must either construe the action as arising under § 2255 or dismiss it. See Pack, 218 F.3d at 452. Because petitioner was convicted in the Western District of Texas, this Court has no jurisdiction over a § 2255 motion filed by him. See Ojo v. INS, 106 F.3d 680, 683 (5th Cir. 1997) (holding that “the only court with jurisdiction to hear [a motion to vacate] is the court that sentenced [petitioner]”). Therefore, the Court may not construe the action as one under § 2255, and this action should be dismissed for lack of jurisdiction. See Christopher, 342 F.3d at 379 (remanding a case for dismissal for lack of jurisdiction when the petitioner failed to show § 2255 inadequate or ineffective).

III. RECOMMENDATION

For the foregoing reasons, it is recommended that the Court DISMISS petitioner’s application for habeas corpus relief brought pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 2241 for lack of jurisdiction.

SIGNED this 15th day of November, 2006.
